

Newspaper Article

Nelly Bly wrote about those things which she knew firsthand. She believed that one had to experience the subject before one could write a good article.

There are many things you know about because you have experienced them firsthand. You know about attending your school. You know about living on your street. You know about a special trip that you have taken: to the grocery store, to the park, to a friend's house. On the newspaper page below, write about that event that you have experienced firsthand. Describe the school, the street, the store, the park, the house, or other place so well that readers would know the smells, the sounds, and the sights they would find there. You may wish to write a rough draft of the experience before entering it on the newspaper page below. Introduce your story with an eye-catching headline, and be sure to add an illustration with a caption to your finished article.
